Site Description	This operations room was built between 1941 and 1944 and intended to replace the ad-hoc arrangements that saw anti-aircraft operational command sited at the manor house in Eglinton. Threat of aerial attack receded before the site could be used but it is one of only two examples of this type of structure built in Northern Ireland. The other example was used for storage by the army at Thiepval Barracks in Lisburn.
Landscape Context (setting)
Site Appraisal	One of only two examples in Northern Ireland.
Sensitivity
Associations	Part of WW2 anti-aircraft positions within the LCA
